Brief details on the history of your library buildings.

The first building of the library had 6,500 m² (in the same building from 1945 to 1952 was also settled Faculty of Philosophy). Since 1952, after the adaptation, there were opportunities for proper organization and accommodation of the book fund, improved working conditions and reading rooms (with up to 250 reader's places). In this period the formation of new services began.

The flood in November 1962 and soon after, and the catastrophic earthquake in Skopje on July 26 in 1963, violently and cruelly interrupted the development path of the Library. The building was almost completely destroyed, and the fund, which at that time numbered about 500,000 units, was largely destroyed and damaged. Of special importance was the assistance of a large number of libraries and other institutions from the world which were involved in the fund's renewal. These events in the history of the Library are marked as an unforgettable manifestation of professional solidarity and general humanity. In the first days after the earthquake, part of the library's fund, saved from the ruins, was evacuated to the historical building Daut Pasha Amam. Shortly thereafter, in early 1964, it was moved and placed in purpose-built prefabricated buildings. The construction of these prefabricated buildings with a total area of 1750 m², of which 1200 m² warehouse space, allowed the Library to continue its work even during those difficult times after the earthquake.

The construction of the new (current) building of the Library, specially designed to be national library with total area of 10.000 m², ended in 1972.

On May 24 in 2009 the new modern building in the continuation of the existing one was officially opened, with which the Library received an additional 3000 m². One part of the special collections, the Virtual Library of Macedonia and the Digitalization Center, as well as extended warehouses are settled in the new building.

Year (first) library building opened	1945 (this building was constructed in 1920, but St. Clement of Ohrid National and University Library was settled in a part of this building since 1945, alongside Faculty of Philosophy, and since 1952 the whole building, after the adaptation, was a seat of the National and University Library of Macedonia)

Any additional information. Eg length of build/cost of build/reason for build	New building was constructed because old building was destroyed by the catastrophic earthquake in 1963.

St Clement of Ohrid National and University Library (NUL) in Skopje is one of the first established institutions with the decision of Anti Fascist Assembly of the National Liberation of Macedonia (ASNOM) on 23rd November 1944, when the Second World War was not yet finished. The flood in 1962 and the earthquake in 1963, violently and cruelly interrupted the Library development. The Library building was almost completely destroyed, and the fund, which at that time numbered about 500,000 units, was largely damaged. In early 1964, the fund was moved and housed in a custom-built prefabricated building where the Library functioned until it moved into the new and modern building in 1972. At the beginning of 2008 the foundation stone of new and modern building as an extension of the current one was laid by which the Library has received additional 3000 m2.
